getaways

January is all about revitalising mind and body, so why not spoil Mother Nature in 2012 by planning your holiday at one of these eco-friendly hang-outs.

By Orpa Clausen

umSisi House

Nestled away in the breathtaking Peebles Valley, umSisi House is a tranquil haven created with your privacy in mind. Besides the remarkable structural and interior design, it also brags a number of eco-friendly features.

Its list of "greenery" includes regular recycling of waste, rain water collection, natural compost production and the implementation and upkeep of a small worm farm.

umSisi House also has solar geysers and uses rainbow skylights wherever possible. You might start to feel a little outdone when standing in its inspiring ecological footprint, so why not bring along your own tree to plant in its indigenous forest? Activities include private game drives, lavish picnics, an eclectic mix of action-packed adventures, golfing and even a sprinkle of retail therapy.
